HEART AND HOME TALKS

The Second-class Lady.

She was a little old lady, timid and apologetic, and she sat in her camp chair on the deck of one of the southward-going steamers eyeing the other passengers rather wistfully, responding with a quick smile when they noticed her. A passenger dropped into a chair beside her, at which the old lady brightened considerably. After a little general talk, she brought out what evidently was a burning issue with her, that she was traveling second class. She said it hesitatingly. It was undoubtedly somewhat of a wrench to her pride. "But everybody is so nice," she concluded, "and there is so little difference in the accommodations—eating at the second table is about all—that I don't mind it half so much as I thought I would."

"But what difference does it make?" the other remonstrated. "If one isn't second class, whether one travels second class or not. It's being second class that matters, not how one travels."

The little old lady looked a bit bewildered. "It was necessary I would go steering," the other went on. "I do not think it would affect me any. I would be the same person when I got off the boat that I was when I went on, hating the need of a little extra soap and water."

"But I have never done anything like this before," protested the old lady. "It sort of went against the grain with me."

Poor little old lady! It will probably rankle with her all her life. She'll never tell anybody she went second class except when it is absolutely essential, and then it will hurt.

How many of us are like her! We depend upon some external aid to show the

RULES FOR CARE OF HAIR.

The ideal dressing comb is one of ivory, or, next to this, one of fine rubber. Fine tooth combs are much less used than formerly, for their tendency is to break off or pull out the hair unless very carefully handled.

The most desirable hair brush is one of fine, white bristles, not too soft and yielding.

Everyone knows, or should know, that there is no hair tonic equal to thorough brushing.

Once a month is quite often enough to wash combs and brushes if they are properly cared for daily.

For the thorough washing, half fill a basin with warm (not hot) water, put in a teaspoonful of common baking soda.

Wash the brush out quickly, rinse in warm water and dry in the open air. This treatment will preserve the bristles firm and unmattd.

Combs and brushes should be kept in a covered case away from chance dust and accidental soiling.

world how important we are; rarely do we let character speak for us. We rely upon our clothes to help us, or our furniture. Sometimes an auto sets us up in the world's estimation or a rich or celebrated relation. And nearly every one swallows this bait in his estimate of others. We seem so incapable of judging without the aid of the dollar mark.

As soon as some opera singer gets five thousand a night we rush to hear her. If she sang in some little concert at 50 cents admission we'd turn the evening paper over and say lazily, "I don't believe I'll go to-night. She can't be much, no matter what people say, if she only charges 50 cents."

Bring a picture and dilate on its beauty and the talent of its painter, but say nothing of its size or its cost, and how many would go to see it? But herald it as the largest canvas ever painted or that it is worth a hundred thousand dollars or so and there wouldn't be standing room to view it.

The little old lady made the same mistake in judging. The dollar mark was on the second-class passage, therefore she felt that if she would be judged, and she stood in dread of that judgment.

Probably the dollar-mark standard over-awes us because we are so young as a nation and there is so much wealth and so much show of it that we cannot yet see things in their true perspective. Some day we'll knock away the dollar-mark prop to our judgment and be surprised to see how glad and happy and strong we are without it. We'll live, not merely talk, "A man's a man for a' that."

And all the little old ladies in the country can travel second class if they want to without the slightest tinge of injured pride.

Recipes.
Milk Toast—Use stale bread cut in thin slices. To tempt the appetite, trim off all crust and cut in fancy shapes, then toast slowly until well dried out and golden brown. Scald about one cupful and a half of milk, thicken slightly with a teaspoonful of flour mixed to a smooth paste with cold milk. Add a pinch of salt and simmer for at least five minutes. Pour over the toast, cover, and keep hot for about five minutes that the bread may soften and swell.

Tomato Souffles—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, add one tablespoonful of flour. When well blended add half a cupful of tomato puree, one tablespoonful of powdered thyme, two tablespoonfuls of cream, one of grated cheese. Cook for five minutes, then cool a little. Season with salt and pepper and stir in the yolks of two eggs. Beat up the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth and stir carefully into the mixture. Divide into six buttered ramekins and bake in a hot oven for about ten minutes.

A Circular Scaque.
From the Philadelphia North American.
A hastily made dressing sacque for an invalid may be cut like a cape on circular lines, and after the lower edge and the V-shaped neck opening are lace trimmed or hemmed and feathered, the little garment is drawn together under the arms to form a sleeve.

Exactly where the pins indicate the most comfortable sleeve two long buttonholes are worked upon the front of the garment at each side and upon the back at each side.

Four ribbons an inch wide and three-quarters of a yard long will be required to form the sleeves.

Two are pulled through the corresponding slots under each arm and their ends tied together at the front and at the back, leaving strips of ribbon about four inches long on the under side of the garment to give looseness under the arm.

Sealskin in combination with the soft shades of panne velvet is seen in many a dressy hat.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW

Just after midnight recently two women who were being driven to their homes in a suburban district were seriously injured by collision with a trolley car, and the defense of the motorman was the absence of lights on the carriage and his inability to see it in time to avert the catastrophe.

Strenuous efforts have been made to put through a law compelling vehicles of all kinds to carry lights. They have succeeded only partially, for automobiles are the only kind actually liable to the law for being unlighted after darkness has settled down. The hour of lighting has been designated in some cases, and every auto owner knows that punishment for disobedience in this direction is sure and swift.

One would think that as a mere matter of precaution those who ride after dark would consider lights a necessary part of the outfit. A lantern swung from the axle is better than nothing, as the drivers of wagons for milk and garden truck have learned. That protects one from danger in the rear, but when a carriage must cross tracks of any kind bright side lights are absolutely necessary to safety.

I sometimes fancy that luxury has made us careless. We are so used to brightly lighted streets, for which others care, that we fail to lift the darkness in places under our own personal care. I spent a summer in a place not so many years ago where everybody carried a lantern after dark, because the roads were rough and cows and horses were allowed to roam as they pleased. They went to sleep on any spot they fancied, and it was decidedly unpleasant to trip and fall over a large warm body, as I learned before I cultivated caution.

There are many badly lighted roads traversed by motor cars, and all drivers are not as careful as they should be. The vehicles drawn by horses are in grave danger if there is nothing startling to distinguish them from the surrounding shadows. Kerosene lamps are cheap to maintain and are quite sufficient to assure one of a reasonable degree of safety, and masculine common sense should see that they are provided, if women are negligent.

Lawsuits are unsatisfactory means of rectifying blunders. No amount of money can compensate one for a mutilated body, and the process of law is slow, tedious, and oftentimes brutal. To prove a case one has to drink deep of humiliation, for all methods are considered fair in warfare. The expenses of lawsuits are never appreciated beforehand, and nowhere is the ounce of prevention to be more strongly recommended than in matters where litigation looms ahead.

TO-DAY!
FINAL BIG DAY OF THE BUYERS' UNITED-EFFORT SALE

To-day or not at all. Sale closes to-night. Interest has grown each day, and we expect this to be the busiest of all.

Every day the interest in this great sale has grown. It's a fitting testimonial to the great bargains that we have accumulated for this event. Merchandise is offered that is seasonable—needed TO-DAY. More than 140 items in the sale, and surely from such a large number you will be interested in more than one.

We've sold out of some lots, but these have been replaced with others of similar character at equally low or lower prices. YOU'RE ON THE MINORITY SIDE IF YOU HAVEN'T ATTENDED THIS SALE. DO SO TO-DAY WITHOUT FAIL.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

A FEW weeks ago I suggested several tests, whereby a girl might tell what kind of a husband the man who was asking her to sit across the breakfast table from him the rest of her days, would make.

And prime among them was, Is he good to his mother?

Is he thoughtful of her comfort?

Does he always treat her with respect and tenderness?

Does he remember to do for her the little things that mean so much in a woman's life?

The man who fits in with the right answer to all these questions seems to me the best kind of a man to marry, for almost always "a good husband is a good son, grown up."

It has been suggested by one of my correspondents that I add to this, that to be a good husband a man does not need to cease to be a good son.

"There is many a woman," he goes on to say, "who will feel and show petty jealousy if a man evidences a natural fondness for the one woman who has been all in all to him up to the time he chose his wife."

I agree with my correspondent as to the existence of such a type of woman.

And also as to her despicableness.

Any woman who does not have sympathy enough to realize what it must mean to the mother to yield the position of first that she has always held in her son's heart, and who does not have kindness enough to make that dereliction easier instead of harder, deserves to learn sympathy and kindness in the only way they can come to some people—by suffering.

I think the relationship between husband and wife is, or should be, more sacred than any other upon earth.

A man's wife isn't his true wife unless she means more to him than his mother or his children—and it should be the same with her.

But the very fact that she has so unquestionable a right to the first place ought to make a wife most forbearing to the woman who has hitherto held it.

She ought to realize that she, too, may have a son some day, and may have the same experience to pass through. And for the sake of the kindness and forbearance she hopes to receive, she ought to try to give good measure of kindness and forbearance—if forbearance is necessary—and to try to make the mother who feels that she has lost a son find, instead, that she has gained a daughter.

I don't know as I ever heard of a case where the husband was jealous of his wife's affection for her mother.

But if there be such cases—well, will the offender please substitute "husband" for "wife" and "son" for "daughter" and "his" for "her" and take the above suggestions, thus altered, for themselves?

Easy Way to Hemstitch.
From Home Notes.
Draw the required number of threads. Turn the hem down and tack with the edge in the center of the drawn threads. Lessen the tension of your machine and stretch as nearly on the edge of the hem as possible. Remove the tacking threads, take the garment in one hand and the hem in the other and pull the edge of the hem to the bottom of the drawn threads. This is very quickly done, and can scarcely be distinguished from hand work. Hemstitched tucks are made on the same principle.

To get ahead of recent styles, buy largely of padded applique, as it will be much used.
